March 24th

Dear N. Raemaekers

I am writing to you very, very sadly, to tell you that I have been compelled to defer the publication of my book. Your splendid design arrived the very day that I had finally decided to do so, but I am hoping that in spite of the delay you will allow me to keep the cover by me, and to use it when I am able to bring the book out which I hope to do next spring.)

It is a splendid design, and I am very proud to have it, and more than grateful to you for your help. I took it away from the publishers, and told them I would write to you, so, if they have not acknowledged its arrival, this is why.

I shall hope to see you when you return to England, in order to thank you verbally.

I am so disappointed at the delay!

Yours very sincerely
